The National Assembly of Women was founded on the 8th March 1952 at St Pancras Town Hall, London. Women from all walks of life and from all parts of Britain came together to pledge their support for the aims set out in the International Charter for Women for the defence of peace, for higher living standards and the rights of children to health, education and a full life.

The National Assembly of Women continues to campaign for the full social, economic, legal, political and cultural independence and equality for women regardless of age, race, colour, religion, philosophical belief, sexual orientation or nationality.

It is well supported by the labour and trade union movement and is proud to have a number of outstanding women as honorary Vice Presidents.

As the only British women's organisation affiliated to the Women's International Democratic Federation (WIDF), it remains committed to international solidarity and supports the struggle for women's rights throughout the world.
